History of the site of the 1000 Islands Charity Casino

by Blu Mackintosh

This summer, in August 2001, a fleet of red backhoes, drills, front-end loaders and dump trucks started swarming over the land on part of Lot 18, Concession 1, in what is now Leeds and the Thousand Islands. (This new amalgamated municipality includes the former Township of Front of Leeds - which in turn included the previous Front of Leeds). An Ontario government Charity Casino is being built, scheduled to open in 2002. This is just short of two hundred years since Letters Patent were issued in 1803 to one James Drummond for a parcel of 384 acres, which included this land.

Its history is interesting. In May of 1846, the farm, stretching all the way from the St. Lawrence River to the northern boundary of the First Concession, was sold by Robert Russell Boag to George Brown. The Browns had come to Canada in 1834, when George was 38. They were one of the many families who came to Canada from Berwickshire, on the east coast of lowland Scotland. Several families arrived from the same place at this time, and they must have been content to settle near one another and to see their children marry. The families names included Haig, Waldie, Mitchell, Lindsay, Brotherson and Richardson.

Judging from their photographs, George Brown and his wife, Janet McDougal, were no-nonsense, hard-working people. With their slightly grim mouths and determined eyebrows, they look like a couple who were not given to flights of fancy. They had a son who remained single, but their three daughters (who have the same square faces and firmly set mouths) married and settled close by. Daughter Jane and her husband George Mitchell had the farm to the west (parts of Lots 17 and 18), Ann and her husband John Haig settled on the farm to the east (part of Lot 19), and Isabella and her husband David Darling were on the farm to the north on the second concession, as was George's brother Adam Brown. (Between lots 18 and 19, there was originally a road allowance leading right down to the river. Parts of it are still visible today in Robertson Road and the section of Day's Road that runs straight down to meet Dark Island Lane and Islandview Lane.)

Although photographs of the family exist, we have found only one photograph of the house and none of the original farm buildings on this land, but before the bulldozers arrived this year, foundations of a house, a barn and several outbuildings were still discernable, located near a rocky outcropping not far from the 401.

However, Alan Lindsay, one of the many descendants of George Brown who still live in the area, remembers it. "The house was stone, covered with rough-cast and painted white," he recalls. "Its style was unusual from other stone houses in the area because the roof had a steeper pitch. The chimneys, after they came through the roof, separated into two flues and then were joined into one again at the cap. A summer kitchen on the back was joined to the main house by a passage. There was an open verandah across the front. The house appeared to have little alteration. There was a large barn and also various outbuildings behind the house."

Alan, along with Doug Gilbert of Ivy Lea and Arthur Waldie of Gananoque, are descendants of Isabella and David Darling. (Actually, they are also descendants of Isabella's sister Ann Haig, since Ann's daughter Janet married her first cousin, Isabella's son John McDougal Darling.) Peter Murray of Gananoque and Doug Matthew of Landon Bay are descendants of Jane and George Mitchell, who later founded Mitchell and Wilson.

In 1875, when George Brown reached the age of 79, he sold the east three-quarters of his lot to his nephew Adam Brown. (The west quarter was already part of the farm of his daughter Jane and her husband George Mitchell.) However, Adam's wife died shortly afterwards, and he left the farm and moved to Michigan.

In 1882, the farm was sold to Lawrence Gavin. George Brown had died in 1881 at the age of 85 and David Darling was the executor of his father-in-law's estate. Except for 40 acres at the north end of his property, which Lawrence Gavin sold to John M. Darling (who already had adjoining property in the second concession), the farm remained in the Gavin family for the next 56 years. Those who are alive today tend to remember the farm as "the Gavin place". When he died in 1910, Lawrence Gavin left it to his wife Ellen until her death (which was in 1929), and after that to his son Lawrence Patrick Gavin.

Art Waldie, a descendant of the Darling family, spent his childhood on the Darling farm abutting the Gavin farm to the north, south of where Hiscocks School is now. His father had died when Art was a tiny baby, and his widowed mother and his brother moved in with his grandfather, John Darling. He remembers in the 1920s, when he was about 12, walking with his grandfather down a path through pastures to visit the Gavin family. (There were, in fact, two Darling farms, his grandfather's and his uncle's and at one point, they swapped.) It may have been during this period that the farm was rented out to Orange Running and his family.

Lawrence Patrick Gavin's sister May Loretta Gavin, known as "Mamie", eventually married Wilfred James O'Brien. (They had two daughters and two sons. Art Waldie remembers taking out one of the daughters, Eleanor, who later married Brome Folkes.) When her brother died in 1936 at the age of 47, Mamie settled his estate. The farm was sold two years later, in 1938, to John Wesley Hall, known as "Wes", and his wife Mary Frances.

The Halls' son Bill and his wife Olive settled on the farm, but it would only be for a few years. Tragically, Bill was drowned on a fishing trip with Ford Gray on May 10, 1944, and the widowed Olive and her daughters Virginia and Jeanne moved away. Alan Lindsay recalls stopping in to say goodbye to Olive and the girls the day they left. Olive later re-married, to Bert Nightengale. Her daughter Virginia later married John Lee, whose family still owns property on Hay Island.

A few years later, in 1948, the farm changed hands once again when John Welsey Hall sold it to a Polish man named Konstanty Mikulski. This would be the last time it would be owned as a farm. Mr. Mikulski appears to have owned it, at least at first, in conjunction with several other of his countrymen.

Times were rapidly changing. The two world wars were over. Tourism was starting to grow. Residential and cottage property in the Thousand Islands was becoming sought after. The original Brown holdings, which had once stretched all the way from the waterfront to the boundary of the second concession, had been divided many times over the years. Every family now had a car and they needed more and better roads to drive on. The Thousand Islands Parkway (originally 2S for "Highway 2 Scenic") was built in the late 1930s. In 1955, part of the Mikulski farm was expropriated for the long ramp that joined the 401 to the Parkway.

The present-day Parkway overpass over Highway 2 goes right over where George and Jane Mitchell's house once stood. Their barn had been in the corner where the ramp from Highway 2 runs up to the west-bound 401. Alan Lindsay, who walked over the land many times when he was growing up, remembers it very well. "There was a spring there that ran out of a pipe in the corner of the barn all year round," he recalls. "That is why it is so swampy there still."

Meanwhile, Highway 401 was being built across the province. One of the last sections to be constructed was between Gananoque and Brockville, and in 1964, Mr. Mikulski sold the land to the Province of Ontario, which required it "for Provincial purposes". The 401 opened in late 1967, its double lanes and interchanges cutting a wide swath through what was originally George Brown's farm.

The final change came in 2000, the Ontario Lottery and Gaming Corporation (OLGC) announced its intention of constructing a "charity" casino in the 1000 Islands area. In November, a referendum question was on the municipal election ballot in Leeds and the Thousand Islands, Gananoque, Prescott and Brockville, (the four municipalities pinpointed by the OLGC as desirable locations) asking citizens if they would be in favour of a casino. All four voted Yes, and the OLGC eventually chose this site, within the Township of Leeds and the Thousand Islands but on the outskirts of Gananoque, within an easy drive of Kingston but also close to the 1000 Islands Bridge to attract American gamblers. The site appears to be made up mainly of a section of George Brown's farm on Lot 18, but there is also a triangle on the west from George Mitchell's farm (part of Lot 17), and another on the east side in Lot 19 which had originally belonged to John Haig.

The location is highly visible to both Highways 401 and 2, a desirable feature for a casino wishing to attract passers-by. The parcel is a triangle bordered by Highway 401, Highway 2 and the long ramp between Exit 647 from eastbound 401 and the Thousand Islands Parkway. The architect's design, unveiled in August of 2001, shows a 1950s style building with Art Deco touches and a high tower.

It would be hard to imagine a building and use with greater contrast to George Brown's original stone farmhouse, with its many connections to so many local families.

SAND BAY PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

by Bill Boulton

The first Presbyterian presence in this area was Rev. Wm. Smart who began to travel by horseback through the area in 1811. Church services were often held in the schools. Wm. Beatty mentions in his diary of services in the Brick School in the 1860's, as well as the "Reid Settlement", later known as Fairfax. The history of Fairfax school tells of services there and people coming from as far as Black Rapids.

Chalmers Presbyterian Church, built in 1872, was the first church built in the present village, then known as 'Lansdowne Station'. A few years later it was decided to build two additional churches to ease the distance which had to be travelled to go to church.

On January 17, 1881, the Trustees of Sand Bay Presbyterian congregation, namely Benjamine Herbison, Thomas Blair, William McCready, Samuel Moorhead and William Plunkett, purchased the south part of Lot 7, Con. 6 of the Township of Lansdowne for $70.00 from Charles and Sarah Lappan. This location was near Sand Bay corner. A white frame church was built, opening in 1882. The minister at the time was Rev. Godfrey Shore.

A shed was also erected, to the west and slightly behind, to shelter the horses. This had "a good hall" above where the Sons of Temperance held their weekly meetings. It was also used for Sunday School and entertainments. During renovation of the church, services were held here. In later years it was sold to Mr. Joshua Free who dismantled it and used the lumber.

St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church at Fairfax was also built at this time, and opened November 14, 1882. From pictures we know the two buildings were identical except for the position of the tower; Sand Bay on the left, and Fairfax on the right. Both of these churches were part of the Lansdowne Charge.

Services at Sand Bay were always held in the afternoon, with Sunday School preceding. Fairfax and Lansdowne alternated between morning and evening services. On Communion Sundays, the three congregations worshiped together, the churches taking turns. Dulcemaine Methodists and Sand Bay always cooperated, helping and sharing with each other.

Ministers over the years were: Rev. Godfrey Shore, Rev. Edward N.B. Millard, Rev. John Fairlie, Rev. T.F. Heeney and Rev. I.N. Beckstead. Rev. Heeney with his sister Robina, was the first to occupy the new manse built in Lansdowne in 1902 (now United Church Manse, Johnston Street). In 1906 Mr. Heeney and the church organist, Miss Florence Herbison, were married. Originally the hymns were started with a tuning fork. In the early 1900's Mrs. Elgin McCready was the organist, followed by Miss Katie Johnston.

Some of the early congregation were: Blair, Herbison, McCready, Moorehead, Plunket, Vanorman, Johnston, Heaslip and Patience.

Over the years many changes took place in the community, many families moved depleting the congregation. With church union on the horizon, the church closed. For a few years it was rented to the United Pentecostal Assembly, who bought the property in 1930.

SAND BAY PENTECOSTAL CHURCH by Bill Boulton

Sand Bay Pentecostal Church is one, if not the, oldest congregation of the Pentecostal faith in Canada.

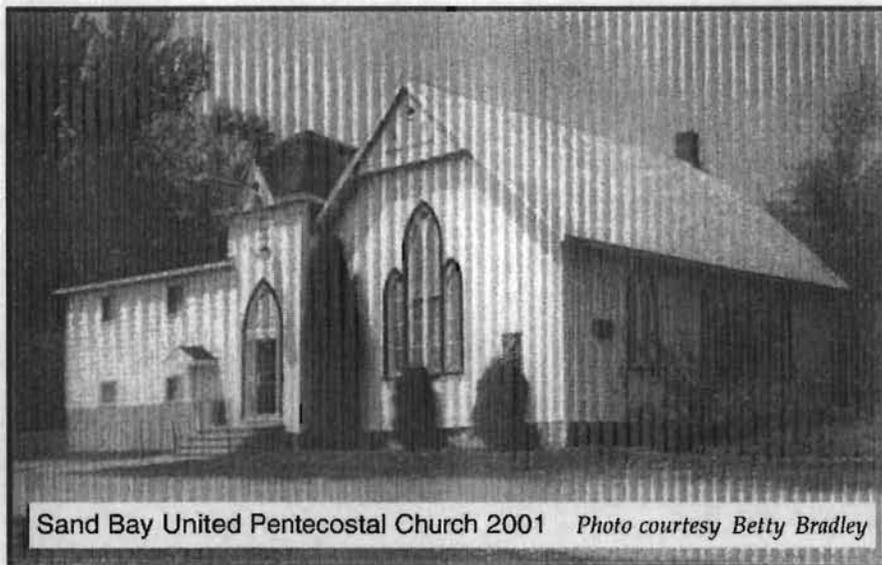

The Pentecostal church in this area can trace its beginnings prior to 1905 to two brothers, Alexander and Anthony McCready. These two men had started in the Methodist Church but had followed Rev. Ralph C. Horner who founded the Holiness Movement or 'Hornerites'. They were holding meetings in houses in Sand Bay, Black Rapids and Long Point area. Services were held for a time in Long Point school, above the Long Point cheese factory and upstairs above the Orange Lodge hall in Ellisville, and at the same time Camp Meetings in a tent at Singleton Lake.

In 1906, at the age of 17, Clarence L. Cross joined with the McCready brothers at a Holiness meeting in Woodvale school. In 1908 there were two congregations, one at Sand Bay with C.L. Cross and one at Ellisville and Singleton Lake pastored by Alexander McCready. At a tent meeting in 1911 held at the farm of W.J. Running, now part of Charleston Lake Park, a split developed over beliefs. Alexander McCready is said to have shaken hands with C.L. Cross and went on his way. This left C.L. Cross at age 22 pastor of the remaining part of Sand Bay and Lansdowne.

Services were held in homes and at a rented farm owned by Anthon McCready on Sand Bay Road (later owned by the Fodey family). When this farm was sold, the congregation rented the hall above the horse shed at the Sand Bay Presbyterian Church. In 1921 the congregation bought the Holiness Movement Church built in 1899 near the corner of Sand Bay and Outlet Roads. Two years later the church burned to the ground. Church services were again held in homes and from 1923 - 25 in a rented hall in Lansdowne.

The Sand Bay Presbyterian Church had become the property of the United Church of Canada following church union in 1925, but it was not being used. The Pentecostal congregation rented the building for a few years, then bought it in 1930. The church board at that time was: Vernal Running, Ernest Pritchard and Wilmer Bradley.

In the 1960's the building was redecorated and a couple of rooms added. In the early 1970's the church was painted again and the steeple removed. In 1979 a Christian Education Centre was added. This was a two level addition with kitchen and washroom facilities, and rooms for Sunday School classes. In the fall of 1957 a lot was purchased near Wiltse Creek and a house moved to the location to serve as a parsonage.

Ministers over the years were: Clarence L. Cross, Mr. Lynch, A.E. Adams, Albert Jones, Wesley O'Brien, Ralph Reynolds, George Mallory, Charles Rutter, Lewis E. Rabbie, Wayne Budgell, Thomas Dixon, and presently Kevin Shaw. Clarence L. Cross served the Sand Bay church four times, for a total of 25 years. Ralph Reynolds also taught at Dulcemaine school before going to Jamaica as a missionary.

From 1911 to 1919 the church had no affiliation. From 1919 to 1941 it was affiliated with the Pentecostal Assemblies of Canada. In 1941 it joined the Apostolic Church of Pentecost, and since 1945 has been a member of the United Pentecostal Church International.

Recently the church buildings were offered for sale. Again changes in the community and families moving have changed the base of the congregation. The parsonage has already been sold. The last service was held in the church on October 28. They have bought a building in Gananoque and will hold their first service there on November 2. It will be known as Gateway United Pentecostal Church. This will probably mark the end of the 120 year history of this building as a church.

FATAL RAILWAY COLLISION

John Quinn Diary August 26, 1901 "A terrible collision at T. I. Junction, two men killed".

The Gananoque Reporter Saturday August 30, 1901

The worst accident that ever occurred on the railway near Gananoque happened between 2 and 3 o'clock last Tuesday morning, right at the G.T.R. station when a fast moving freight train that was not timed to stop here ran into another freight train that was backing across the main track to a siding. The driver of the engine, T.G. Miron, and a brakeman, Charles Stone, were killed; the fireman David Osborne, was thrown among the wreck, and considerably bruised and his clothing torn, but was not seriously injured, and was all right within a few hours. A lot of cars, loaded principally with flour, were smashed to pieces, and piled one upon another 25 feet high.

The engine tipped over and laid partly across both tracks.

All tracks were blocked for several hours. Wrecking trains were brought from Brockville and Kingston early in the morning, and proceeded to clear the tracks, working from both directions.

The express train going east reached the wreck shortly after the accident, and could not get past. This was the train the freight was getting out of the way of, by going on to a siding while the express went by. Other trains due during the morning hours were held at Brockville and Kingston. Men were put to work building a short piece of track to connect main tracks east of the station with the track used by the Thousand Island train. When this was done, shortly after 8 o'clock, there was a clear way south of the station, and trains were passed on that until the other tracks were cleared.

Immediately after the accident, Dr. Shaw, of Lansdowne, Coroner, was notified and came up. He had a jury sworn in, and the bodies were examined. Then the inquest was adjourned till Wednesday evening at the town hall here.

MEMORIES OF GREENFIELD SCHOOL

By Elizabeth (Webster) Goddard

On rainy days we used to play in the woodshed. One of our favourite games was 'Court'. We would plead our cases -- always wild tales of bank robberies, rustling or speeding -- in front of the toughest judge in the county -- Garry Burns. After impassioned presentations, with lively interjections from witnesses and the visitors, Garry would announce his verdict and penalties -- "Guilty -- hang 'im!". We would howl and scream with laughter -- no matter what the case or how ridiculous the circumstances, Garry's verdict never wavered.

On Arbour Day we would clean up the school yard and then go on a picnic on the big hill on Gordon Burn's farm. That was a great outing, notable for the treat of a bottle of orange pop, which we did not get very often.

The Christmas season was very special.. Preparations for the concert seemed to take months. We knew we were getting close to the big night when the curtains were hung on the wires over the platform. I always thought they were so impressive -- Burgundy fabric which hung on brass rings which made a scraping sound as the curtains were pulled back and forth. On concert night it was so exciting to drive up the road and see the lights on at the school! And to see so many cars lined up along the sides of the road! The school was always packed and hot. We would do our songs, a play, and the younger students would always do a recitation. For the nativity story we would wear a collection of bathrobes and tea towels and look surprisingly angelic. Santa would appear with a jingling of real sleigh bells from out in the snow, bringing bags of candy which he would present to the students. He would then hand out our presents which the students had brought for each other. Then he would disappear into the snow.

We used to make our own skating rink on the flat piece of land east of the school, near the woodshed. This was no mean feat, since we had to pump and carry the water from the well. But we had a great time sliding and skating on the rink at noon hour. One year Gord Burns' field flooded up and we were allowed to skate there.

With so many grades in one room, everyone helped each other with their work. Because I was a good reader I used to give the older classes their spelling tests. One day I read "determined" as "Deeter mine" which stimulated howls of laughter from the students and a flush of embarrassment from me.

I remember the smells of the school. When we would return in the fall, the floors had been wiped with some oil product, which always smelled so good. The wood smoke would be curling from the chimney in the cold seasons and swirl around the roof. Wet, wooly mitts would steam on the metal rack around the stove.

We used to eat our lunches all together in the classroom, and if the weather was nice, on the flag pole stand in the yard. We used to compare lunches and occasionally swap. We would play baseball, anny-anny-I over, tag and chase. One time we lost the baseball down a woodchuck hole and Tom Moorhead stayed out and dug for it until he retrieved it. He came in, all sweaty and dirty, but successful.

We used to listen to a story after lunch. Sometimes the older students would read. I remember Mrs. McKay reading Miss Hickory and Paddle-to-the-Sea. We did not have an extensive library, but they were good books.

I remember how upset, frightened and betrayed I felt when I learned they would be closing our school. It felt like we were going to be orphans, sent off into that monstrous school with a population of strangers. We were told that we would not be allowed to play at recess with children outside our own grade -- unheard of for children who had played with everyone. They told us we would have all this wonderful playground equipment at the new school. We never saw it!
